Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: Applicants argue that Kumagai does not teach that the silane coupling agent will react as part of the polymerization and incorporated in the three dimensional network. This argument is not convincing. The claimed invention is not limited to a silane that will react as part of the polymerization; the imadazole reaction product of 3methacryloxypropyltrimethoxysilane will not react with a urethanization in the claims or when used in Kumagai. Applicants also argue that Rasshofer does not teach the claimed invention because the present invention is intended to avoid the unpleasant odor generated when using a tertiary amine compound as a catalyst and to improve the curing and adhesion to metals. This argument is not convincing. It is irrelevant if applicants motivation for combining prior art elements is different from that taught in the references. Applicants argue that the catalytic activity of Sato is not the same as the catalytic activity of the claims because in Sato it is the raction of the resin with the glass fibers on which the silane imidazole is coated. This argument is not convincing. Applicants have not described what reaction is supposed to be occurring between the various resin matrices and very inert glass fibers; nor has Applicant address Examiner's argument that the matrices are partially cured or sem-hardened pre-pregs. Applicants argue that there are unexpected results in the claimed composition because they have shown that when the imidazole group containing silane coupling agents are added to a reaction system of polyol and polyisocyanate the resultant polyurethane 1) has a lower residual isocyanate group content than that of a system to which no catalyst was added, 2) showed increased adhesion to a zinc plated steel substrate and 3) showed increased corrosion resistance effect on the zinc plated steel substrate. This argument is not convincing. As discussed in the previous office action, none of these results are unexpected, but rather indicative of the catalytic activity and adhesion promotion of imidazoles and silanes disclosed in the cited references.
